Civilization had two faces. On the one hand, it was a specific way of organizing human society, a socioeconomic system. On the other, it was a way of thinking about reality, a cognitive structure. It was the dominant organizing force in human events for a very long time, five and a half millennia to be exact. The vast majority of human beings alive today were born into and shaped by some branch of civilization. Even those small remnants of the human race we call 'primitive' or 'aboriginal' have all been affected to some degree by contact with one civilized society or another.

The branch of civilization which is the American heritage is called Western Civilization. It began in the Fertile Crescent around 3500 B. C. and its offshoots eventually spread over Europe, much of what was the Soviet Union, the Middle East, Africa, Australia, New Zealand, and North and South America. Prophetic voices have been predicting the collapse of Western Civilization for many years. But predictions are no longer in order because at this moment Western Civilization is in the midst of collapsing. There are eddies of resistance, reaction and even revitalization in the torrent which is sweeping it away but nothing can save it because a revolution in the human mind is occurring which is even more radical than the mental revolution which first created civilization.

The current revolution is rooted in a radical freedom of the mind which neither primitive nor civilized human beings have ever before experienced. It can be terrifying, this new freedom which has emerged in only a few decades. It can and does lead to mental turmoil and social chaos. But it is also opening up a limitless expanse of possibilities for those who successfully pass through its terror and anguish. Their reward - and burden - will be a new mind, a postcivilized mind. The postcivilized mind will not be organized or motivated in the same way as the civilized mind was but it will be able to understand and draw upon the rich product of civilization in a way that will breathe new life into the past. If this is to be, then we need to understand with utmost clarity what the civilized mind was, what it enabled us to accomplish, and how it limited us. That is the purpose of this book.

Beyond Civilization: A Review

By Dena

Keith Chandler's book is a fascinating read. While his "Mindset Theory" is a new and refreshing look at the civilisations of the world, it is based on a lifetime of scholarly research.

It is written in an easy conversational style and I especially liked not having to flip to the end of the chapter, or the back of the book for footnotes.

Chandler's "Mindset Theory" opens up a whole new way of looking at various cultures, societies, and religious faiths.

"Beyond Civilization" should be required reading for every student in philosophy, history, or religion.

It will be a basic text in the World Religions Course I will be directing next spring.

A Super Read!

fascinating

This is an excellent read, especially if you like highbrow ideas. Reminds me of Ken Wilber. The author presents original thinking on a grand scale and his crisp style makes a real page-turner out of what could have been a musty-dusty history lesson. I must note that my own background in history is not sufficient to dispute any of the author's findings so perhaps a historian will write a review. I don't know when I have enjoyed a book more.

New Look at Civilizations

By A Customer

I never thought of cultures being shaped by mindsets before I read this book. Now that we are in an anti terrorist war I can see that mind sets plays the major role of the terrorists. So deeply entrenched is their mind set that they would rather die than give it up.

The world we live in today calls for us to understand civilizations as we go into the future and prepare to deal with unbeandable mind sets.
