Long Island, New York

August 1968

The last time Vincent Fossari saw his father alive was the moment before the explosion, when the older man's eyes froze in the space between his surgical cap and mask. Julian Fossari's life ended in a green flash from the lights that hung above the four-year-old boy who lay draped and unconscious on the operating table.

From the observatory's first row seat, Vincent Fossari felt his body jar in the deafening blast. He saw that the force had severed the wires glued to the child's small chest, disconnecting them from the cardiac monitor chirping in erratic fits near the outlying wall. The cauterizer whipped its narrow rubber body like a snake trying to shake loose from a trap. The instrument's heated end glowed in the now-dim room. Then it cooled off and went out.

Above, Vincent Fossari could hear the steady hissing of gas as it escaped from the detached facemask that had been held over the child's nose and mouth a moment before.

Fossari ran for the telephone next to the teaching theater's exit door and impatiently waited for the operator's voice. "Dr. Fossari here," he screamed. "Get the crash team. Stat! Explosion in OR 12."

Almost before he finished, he heard the overhead speakers spring to life. "Code Blue and Code Red. OR 12. Code Blue and Code Red. OR 12."

In a panic, Vincent Fossari stood by the door, the telephone still in his hand. He watched the crash cart push into the operating room, followed by three nurses and a doctor. One of the nurses took the fire extinguisher off the wall and sprayed the flames that licked at the child's surgical drape. Another woman ran to turn off the switch controlling the anesthetic gas filling the room.

The doctor kneeled on the floor next to Julian Fossari, and leaned his ear on the surgeon's chest. Vincent saw the blackened face of his father roll to one side and then stop. From where he stood, Vincent Fossari knew his father was dead – along with the child, the scrub nurse, and the anesthesiologist. Two others, the circulating nurse, and an operating room technician sat dazed in opposite corners of the room. Stretchers arrived and the two survivors were wheeled away.

Vincent Fossari didn't hear the conversation below, but he saw the doctor cover four people with clean white sheets in the soot-laden room.
